

Just a Co-Incidence or was it a Prophecy ?

by Rosine de Bouneville

In July 1978, Candour's leading article was headlined: THE BULL'S IN THE CHINA SHOP which seems now to be uncommonly relative to the noxious goings-on presently being "celebrated in Hong Kong" displayed with such relish on what is claimed to be the "B"BC's television news programme after the same subject had shared the daily newspapers front pages with the Tyson outrages on "Holy's Ear". How unwittingly appropriate!

The then Candour leader said:

The headlines are all about the USA and Soviet Union and their possible confrontation in Africa, and what America and Britain propose to do about it but, of course, not a whisper about the continued technological expertise, uncomplementary trade, one sided "agreements" and ruinous (ruinous for us) loans quietly passing from West to East. According to the media, the SALT talks are at least not at a stand-still and might progress; if Brzezinski is tough enough Carter may still salvage some human rights for dissident Jews and the detente merry-go-round can continue to revolve around Africa for the Africans where French inspired Moroccans can keep Russians and Cubans at bay.... All snow on the news desert's dusty face.

Where we are really going is to Peking with the Money-Power - or at least half of it, and if that sounds crazy, only consider some realities.

a) The Western and Third World's debt saturation and therefore trade stagnation resulting in mountainous surpluses.

b) The Rockefeller-Rothschild rivalry, and the aims of the two Zionisms.

c) The liberal demands for conventional disarmament and nuclear abolishment allied to universal outrage at Soviet treatment of Jewish dissidents.

d) The bankruptcy of New York and the Chase-Manhattan Bank.

e) The proposed industrialisation and nuclearisation of the Red Republic of China.

f) The media respectability of all communisms except Soviet Communism.

To the discerning, that is a scene set for momentous change such as took place in 1913 when the Money Power betook itself to New York from London. A year later the world was all at war; Britain's power began its long decline and the "Almighty dollar" its comparatively short supremacy. The ominous thing about history is the frequency with which it repeats itself.

The reality of the financial and industrial "pause" caused by a), needs no amplification; the whole world is experiencing its effects. Some people have more armour plate to ward off the blows or are cushioned with more fat, but everyone complains and demands a cure without knowing what medicine to use - or if they do know, they dare not mention it because it has been labelled "Not for human consumption" a long time ago.

For informed evidence and speculation on b) I am indebted to my colleague of Cut and Thrust who writes of the resurgence of troubles in the former Belgian territory of the Congo that:-

"The real and precise interpretation of the machinations of High Finance is difficult to determine at the best of times, but this region makes it doubly so, since it is an area of great contention between the rival battalions of the Money Power.

To seek a greater understanding of the latest developments we must re-evaluate the pre-and-post Independence history of this country.

As was to be expected, the Belgian Empire like those of other European nations, came into the gunights of the Dollar Imperialists of Wall Street, and a concerted effort on their part was sufficient to evict the Belgians from their rightful possession.

The result of "Independence" was not only to set the Congo on a collision course with historical African barbarism, but also to facilitate the arrival of a strong Rockefeller oriented presence in this unhappy country.

This vested interest gained a strong representation in the policy direction of Union Miniere, a company which held a virtual monopoly of the mineral resources of the Congo, which were to all intents and purposes concentrated in the Province of Katanga.

Any competent economist could show that in empirical terms the Congo was financially dependent on this one province for its continued existence. Consequently it can be readily seen that its ownership had vast political, social and economic ramifications.

Union Miniere was however, despite the new arrivals, still firmly dominated by the Rothschild and Oppenheimer interests, who formulated an alliance for their mutual benefit. From this point onwards it emerges that the component elements of the World International Finance Oligarchy had widely differing views as to the future course of the territory.

For reasons known only to themselves, the Rothschild-Oppenheimer axis determined that Katanga should become an autonomous state, and to this end backed the luckless Tshombe in his separatist demands.

The Rockefellers, again for reasons unknown, were equally determined that this province would remain under the firm control of the Central Government, and therefore initiated a complex and devious plan, utilizing cosmetic "front men" such as George Ball, which thwarted any hope of an independent State. The end result of this wheeling and dealing was that the Rockefeller financed and controlled United Nations made a brusque entrance. A polyglot "Peace keeping" force was hastily assembled and deployed in the Congo, where through anarchy out of chaos, it dutifully crushed the rebellion and inaugurated a new central government.

It appeared that the Rockefellers had completely outmanoeuvred and outgunned the Roth/Opp alliance, but this was demonstrably not the case, since the new Head of State was none other than the Rothschild protege Tshombe!

Commonsense dictates that something or someone had brought pressure on the duelling gladiators to force them to an impasse.

The front man for this third group was Mr. L. E. Detweiler who had been instrumental in the rise of the former President, Patrice Lumumba, but who, following the murder of the latter seemingly disappeared from the Congolese scene. The interests that Mr. Detweiler represented have always remained hidden, but it may now be possible to hazard an educated guess after many more years experience of continued financial interaction. But before a realistic assessment can be made, it is important to record a highly informative quotation which was published in the "Star Ledger" of Newark, New Jersey at the time of the troubles:-

"As long as Katanga remains independent under pro Western President Tshombe, Union Miniere probably will retain control of the largest and richest copper deposits. But if the Tshombe Government falls and Katanga again becomes part of the Congo Republic, the mineral monopoly will be finished". Tshombe's reign was short, his departure abrupt, his end untimely and violent.

Bearing all this information in mind, we must now proceed to answer the question as to why the troubles should erupt at this time.

An admirable article by Mr. James Crossbow entitled "Are the One Worlders Split" reprinted in the October 1977 issue of Spearhead showed quite convincingly that there was and is a particularly new bitter feud going on between the Rothschild and Rockefeller branches of the Conspiracy.

It has always been one of the rules of nature that all is fair in love and war, and this is equally applicable to the heady world of power politics.

The events of the last five years or so which have given rise to the present international situation, have conferred on the Roth/Opps several important advantages and it may be this that has encouraged them to try and eliminate the Rockefellers from a couple of their spheres of influence.

On paper at least, the Rockefellers are a great deal wealthier than the Roth/Opps, but their wealth is centred on a highly tenuous banking system of which they appear to be losing control, since Chase Manhattan and Citibank are on the road to bankruptcy following their twenty-six billion pound loans to Third World countries and the position of their oilfields which are largely situated in Arab lands.

Their opposition however, have a stronger financial base as their assets are held in minerals and real estate. During the time that has elapsed since the Independence day power struggle, the Roth/Opps have been consolidating and extending their interests particularly on the African continent. The Oppenheims have an almost unopposed monopoly of the news media in South Africa, Zambia, Rhodesia and Angola, and an even stronger hold on the minerals of those countries.

To illustrate the strength of this hold, one has only to remember that the Oppenheimer-owned mines in Angola did not stop production for a single day during the course of the civil war which eventually brought President Neto and his Marxist MPLA to the top. It also neatly highlights the cosy entente that exists between the bourgeois communists and the plutocratic super-rich.

It is also important to note the new dimension that has been created in the last year or so with regard to relations between South Africa and Israel. "Conservative" newspapers the world over have delighted in telling their readers how both countries are in the same boat and are the whipping post of the world! And this at a time when "anti-communist" Israel is supplying arms to the Marxist Dirge in Ethiopia in their struggle against Eritrean guerillas.

Another point of interest is that Mr. Detweiler is still in circulation and making many shekels in South Africa. The ruling National Party has also ominously stood its first Jewish candidate in the elections. Is this an example of Oppenheimer penetration in Vorster's liberal Government or merely proof of what was there all the time? The conclusions I draw therefore are these:-

Africa, as many leading strategists are now openly saying, is the key to world domination and whoever controls it will have a full fist of trumps, due to its strategic and economic position.

The third group that Mr. Detweiler represented (s) is possibly an agglomeration of Minor Zionist multi-millionaires. They may have brought about the stalemate in the Congo in the sixties because they were unsure of who to back. But with Carter's recent pronouncements on the need for a Palestinian Homeland (a necessary Rockefeller move to ingratiate themselves with the long-suffering Arabs, on whom so much of their wealth is dependent) and with the knowledge that the Rothschilds are significantly pro-Israel, they may have considered it expedient to back the Rothschilds in their power bid. The power of Minor Zionism is admittedly a great deal weaker than either of the other two elites, but with the decline of the Rockefellers and the corresponding rise in the Rothschild/Oppenheimer position, the value of Minor Zionist backing takes on a new and more forceful dimension. I feel the recent Katangese incursion is merely an attempt by the Roth/Opps to test the depth of the water to see whether its dire financial situation has sufficiently weakened the House of Rockefeller for it to be ousted from the Congo and possibly from their footholds in Africa."

Now all these are side steps only on the way to world domination when what is required is a decisive move forward. On the understanding that the devil's forces seem always to be divided over minor issues anyway, who better to make that move than the Rockefellers who would thus further the World Zionist cause and at the same time resuscitate their own financial empire. "No taste in nothing" as they say. The powers that are, seem to have been paving the way to Peking ever since Nixon opened the door with a pingpong ball. It certainly looks as if the move has been accomplished. A very reliable source tells me that the transfer was made through Hong Kong. Very convenient - a British colony where the most suitable operators ensure that "anything goes" and the top financial brass are beyond, though hardly above suspicion, so to speak. Perhaps that is why they still possess it."

How cosy it all is. Diplomatic visits to, with and from wise, kind Chinese communists, so different from these nasty Soviets who, horror of horrors have taken to persecuting the Jews! Then there is this market of eight hundred million people with whom to do some more deficit trade. Was it only some five or so years ago we were rejoicing over the acquisition of a mere two hundred million European market for which we had to sacrifice the six hundred million Empire and Commonwealth complementary trade. Part of that trade was with Australia whose government now angrily complains that Europe is not only not buying enough Australian meat but, by way of subsidies, is filching her markets elsewhere. Perhaps a Chinese entente will give a boost to the rather tarnished glories of the "Asian destiny." Then, there is the apparent "non favoured" status of the USA with her bankrupt commercial capital, surrendered Panama Canal and dilapidated dollar - somebody has certainly kept her in the lurch.

When everybody's up the Marco Polo trail, we should not ignore the signs. Where the Money Power is, there will the supplicants be gathered together. The saturation of the loan markets is making the moneylenders desperate for a really large, goods-destroying war. After all it is no use having One World at last if no one is producing what its masters want. So, war there must be, not only to achieve One World (the planners hope) but to get it off to a satisfactory start - satisfactory to the rulers, naturally.

But since, after the destruction of Nazi Germany there was no suitable "anti-semitic" target ripe for universal condemnation, it became necessary to manufacture one. Hence the semitic nature of the most publicised Soviet dissidents. However, there remains another "but". The success of the anti-Vietnam War campaign has made it too difficult to engender the proper enthusiasm in the USA - and possibly Europe too - for war against communism as such. If the British, European and American peoples can be brought to accept without significant protest a triple alliance with Euro and Sino-Communist dominated states, we would be back to a good old fashioned "Fighting for Freedom" situation - freedom for the Jews primarily, of course, because that has proved the most successful goad to global war to date.

China is an eminently suitable venue for an international moneylender whilst the exigencies of the One World competition calls for the continued financial depression of the United States. Not only will life be more congenial in the midst of an expanding economy in a country quite large enough to provide a place fit for Rockefellers to live in as well as a border with Russia on which controlled "incidents" can take place, but it is also a back re-entrance to Africa. Suppose the makers of a new and "almighty" Chinese dollar filled the vacuum left by the expulsion of Lornrho from Tanzania. One can hardly imagine Nyerere has left himself without the prospect of an alternative banker in the cupboard. In such a case it seems reasonable to suppose that the industrious and numerous Chinese would once more be sent to build the roads and railways that provide Zambia's only alternative to Rhodesia as an outlet for whatever exports she can provide. The possibilities for competition, infiltration, take-over and expansion are endless. Nothing but bulls in the Orient.

When one looks at a map of the world, it appears that there is no better place for financial whizz-adults to be. Since 1913 there has been this "special relationship" between Britain, the discarded beauty, and her supplanter. We all know what in the subsequent years happened to us both. Watching the succession of plenipotentiaries, diplomats, soldiers dropping international bricks and politicians laying paths with them, we are blind if we do not recognise the foundations of another "special relationship" this time between the "West" and the "East". That would constitute three-quarter World Government at least - and if three quarters why not the whole? The question is when is this intended to come to fruition?

The intensity of the propaganda to make respectable all communisms but Soviet communism does indicate a certain amount of urgency. Patriots of all countries must have been appalled at the spectacle of our Queen receiving a State visit from the President of Romania, a country whose anti-communists have been subjected to almost unimaginable torture - no Amnesty International ever investigated them. Her Majesty was reported by the 'B'BC as congratulating Ceausecu on his country's "heroic independence". That puts the royal cache on Euro-Communism; to achieve a Royal State visit to Red China is only impossible in that "it may take a little longer". If that ever comes about, we should look upon it as the signal for the beginning of what the One World planners hope will be, at last, the last war.

Before we all get too depressed at the seeming "inevitability of it all" it may cheer us up to remember that no matter what traitorous governments do, proclaim or agree to, if the people won't have it, it's as dead as a bombay duck.

(Even as I write the Roman Catholic Spanish Royals are in China paying their respects to the rising star - Red One. - Ed.) Thus in 1978....

In the same issue, there was mention of: "Thatcher's Back Room Boys".

Quote: "A Sunday Times article on "The Eminence Grise, Behind Margaret Thatcher" (sic) revealed the strong influence Alfred Sherman is having currently on Tory "think tank" Director, Sir Keith Joseph and, in turn, on Mrs Thatcher. Sherman is an interesting chap. His photograph in the Sunday Times revealed him as a man whose ancestors probably were not knocking about here at the time of Merrie England! As for his political career, that started with him fighting for the Communists in the Spanish Civil War, and he didn't abandon this odious creed till 1948. Evidently Mrs. T. considers him a reformed character. One Tory party worker whose views apparently don't meet with his leader's approval is Christopher Patten* whom The Guardian suggested had lost his job as minute (sic) secretary to the Shadow cabinet on the grounds of his liberal outlook. His replacement is 42-year old David Wolfson, a member of the wealthy Jewish family which runs Great Universal Stores. Multi-millionaire head of the family, Sir Isaac, has played sugar-daddy to the Labour Party over the years, being probably its biggest financial backer outside the trade unions. Mrs Thatcher moves in strange circles indeed."

Chinese Communism ?

Going even further back, we find in Gothic Ripples in 1949, a short history of the birth and nurture of "Chinese" communism. The identities of the obstetricians of which will come as no surprise to Candour readers but may be news to our more youthful readership. It does seem to have been a case of artificial insemination.

Said Gothic Ripples in 1949:

"It was the Sassoon family which turned the normal Chinese dislike and distrust of foreigners into hatred. David Sassoon made the opium trade in China from 1832 until he died in 1864. His family carried on the trade under our flag and made huge fortunes. The British took the blame, and now the Chinese loathe us.

Backed by the Sassoons, the Shanghai Opium Monopoly existed until 1917 under Edward Ezra, its managing committee being composed entirely of Jews and Indians. Not only did the British flag protect the Sassoons in this abominable trade which the Manchus did all they could to prevent, even to the extent of war, but also these Sassoons were welcomed in England instead of being ostracised. Royalty petted them and they inter-married with aryan aristocrats. Some became Baronets and one a Minister of the Government.

When the Freemason, Sun Yat-Sen, began his revolutionary movement at Canton, Morris Cohen, a British subject, became his aide-de-camp and was sent by Sun around the globe to get military experts for his revolutionary army. On Sun Yat-Sen's death bed, Cohen was commended to Chiang Kei-Shek and he was employed as liaison officer between the Canton Government and all foreign Consulates General. Cohen became known in China as Moi-Sha, and was made Military Counsellor to the Cantonese forces, and a General, although still a British subject.

As late as 1939, Cohen was travelling the high seas under the protection of the British flag. The last we heard of him was late in 1945 when he emerged from a Japanese Prisoner-of-War camp. The South African Sunday Express described him as "the guiding genius behind the War-Lords of China."

Jacob Borodin (real name M. Grusenbergl), a Soviet Jew, was sent by the Kremlin with another Jew named Joffe, in 1923 to try to Bolshevise Sun Yat-Sen and became Chief Political Adviser to the Kuomintang. His wife, spied in China for the Soviets. When Sun died, Borodin was left in charge, and it was he who appointed Chiang Kai-Shek to succeed Sun in 1926. However, in 1927, a raid was made by Chang Tso-Ling on the Soviet Embassy at Peking, which revealed the scope and extent of the Soviet plot to bolshevise China, and the Borodins were arrested and imprisoned.

The Soviet General, B.K. Galen whose name was really Chesin, and was nicknamed Blucher, accompanied the "Armenian" Soviet delegate Karachan to Peking in 1924 where a treaty was made with Chang Tso-Ling by which the Chinese Eastern Railway was handed over to the Soviets. This placed the movement of troops at the mercy of the Bolsheviks. The intrigues and bribery by which this surrender by Chang Tso-Ling was obtained were carried out through the medium of a timber magnate called S. Skidelski. At one time the railway was placed in charge of Gekker, Koslowsky and Snamensky (Zamyensky). To continue with the career of General "Galen", he became Chief Military Advisor to Chiang Kai-Shek in 1926.

Now for the Soviet/Jew S.A. Gekker: from as early as 1922, he had been military advisor to the Mongolian Bolshevik Government, and in 1924 he was made head political commissar on the Chinese Eastern Railway aforesaid. The appointment was at the hands of M.D. Lashewitz, who was President of the Board of Railway Control in Moscow.

Nor must the erstwhile Chief Political Advisor to the Kuomintang, Joffe, be forgotten. We have already met him as head of the Soviet mission to Sun Yat-Sen, when with, Jacob Borodin, he tried to develop Sovietism. Later he became political adviser to Chiang Kei-Shek in 1926 and organised the red section of the Kuomintang.

High up in the Political Department of the Red Army in China were also W.N. Levitschev and J.B. Gamarnik who in 1936 was its head.

The Nanking Ministry of Finance has always been dominated by the same brood; viz: Kann, L. Rajchmann and R.Hass. In England their colleague, Billmeir helped with his merchant fleet, to take Soviet arms to China in 1938.

Whoever knows who were the rulers of Bolshevik Russia has only to study the pedigrees of the 'key' foreign operators in China to know who ruled there as well, and destroyed both with the same virus,

Lastly *Gothic Ripples reminded its readers that Chiang Kei-Shek himself was a Freemason, having reached the 33rd Degree in the Scottish Rite!

*There's a familiar name for you! Well he had a nice consolation prize in Hong Kong didn't he? Wonderful what Bilderbergers will do for you when a long term mole is required for dormancy till called for. Ed.

Which was not open to the "respectable frontiers". Those "innocents who lend" an air of verisimilitude to the bald and unconvincing narrative" of the "innocence of the secret society of B'nai B'rith". (Ed.)

As a postscript to all this:

What about Clinton and "Chinagate"? in The Sunday Telegraph on July 13th 1997, Ivo Dawney and his Washington Notebook was quoted: under the line, SILENT HUANG KEEPS "CHINAGATE" INQUIRY GUESSING". He wrote in effect that "after only a week of evidence in the "Chinagate" campaign finance scandal, Democrats and even some Republicans were giving the thumbs down to the aforesaid "Chinagate" scandal and went on to report why they should not do so. Since the allegation that the Clinton administration has 'trailed its coat' for campaign funds in Asia to such a degree as to put U.S. foreign policy in the region up for auction."

It appears that at least two lavish donors to the Democratic National Committee (NDC) made their payments only days before receiving $650,000 in cash transfers from Asia - one from the Bank of Asia - one from the Bank of Beijing (Peking to us), which reminds me of the national newspaper editor who demanded to know what the hell his scribe was doing in Beijing when he should be in the capital of China!).

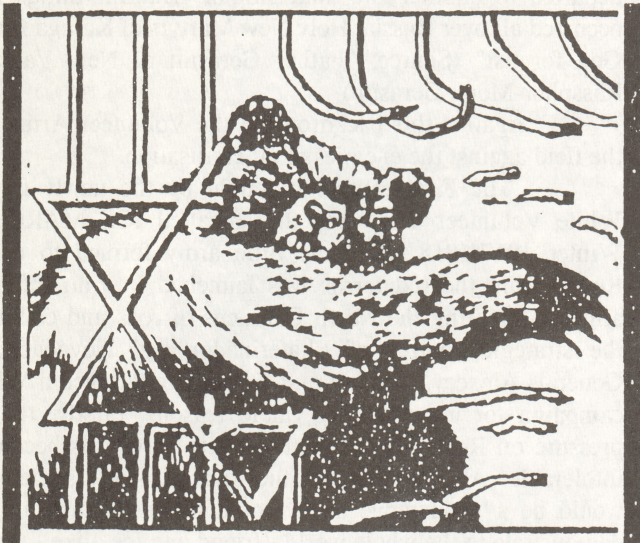

Also says Ivo Dawney, "President Clinton, himself confirmed that he put up the name of his Chinese-American friend, JOHN HUANG as a prospective fund-raiser for DMC. The Senate Committee in Washington had been told by the Fund-Raiser-in Chief that there had been considerable resistance to the appointment 'not least because Huang was unfamiliar with electoral law'. He had already raised some $3,000,000 dollars, one third of which had (concluded page 7.)

CROWN OF THORNS

Part II, The Ice March

The History of the White Movement

by Pavel Andreyevitch Bykov.

With the collapse of Russia into anarchy (examined in our last article, Candour Feb/Mar 1997) many loyal, patriotic Russians opposed to the evil of Bolshevism began to make their way to the North Caucasus and the Rostov on Don locality where it was known that an army was gathering under the leadership of such men as General Alexeev, General Kornilov, Generals Denikin, Markov, Marmantov and Ulagai, to contest the alien control and systematic chaos then prevalent throughout the land of Russia. General Alexeev was the former Chief-of-Staff of the Imperial Russian Army, and his cool judgement and professional expertise were very important in the foundation and organisation of the new army.

Many Russians who were opposed to Communism literally risked life and limb to travel to, and join up with the newly formed White, or Volunteer, Army, as it was known from its earliest days. To name a few instances: Colonel A.V. Drozdovsky, with 1,000 plus soldiers of the old Imperial Army, determined to remain true to their military oath to God, Czar and Russia, marched hundreds of miles from the former front line with the Germans in Western Ukraine to join with those who still stood for Holy Russia against the satanic red internationale. They maintained their unit formation en route and upon their incorporation into the Volunteer Army became the redoubtable Drozdovsky Regiment, one of the crack echelons of the new army. Other units with elite status were the Markov and Kornilov Regiments whose formation and subsequent history we will be examining. General Pyotr L. Kornilov joined the White Army after escaping from a monastery where the Kerensky government had been holding him and other officers prisoner, on account of their Monarchist, Orthodox Christian, and Russian Nationalist views. Other loyal soldiers - both officers and other ranks - were making this same decision all over Russia at this time. For example, the Tekintzy Regiment of the old Russian Army was something akin to one of the proud old regiments of the British Indian Army - distinctive, with its own traditions, code of honour and dress, within the framework of course, of the Imperial Russian Army. This very special formation was composed of mountain men from the Caucasus region who were Muslim by Faith and in their own distinctive uniforms of russet and black. Serving under their own tribal chieftans, they were totally loyal to the Czar, their Little Father (Patushka). When news of the treasonable overthrow of their sovereign reached the mountaineers, they were overcome with grief. Their camp, according to eyewitnesses, rang with weeping and lamentation and calls for action to restore their Emperor. The entire regiment, some 600 plus troops, marched toward Rostov to join the White Army. Another Caucasian formation, the "Savage Division", as it was known, made a similar decision and a similar march to join the forces of civilisation in their fight against the forces of darkness. Numerous officers, officer cadets, Cossacks, NCO's of the Russian army, and tens of thousands of private soldiers bravely made that noble decision to steadfastly refuse to accept the alien political takeover of the Russian nation, or the ever increasing number of atrocities being inflicted upon the people of Russia by the (usually) non-Russian instruments of that coup de main.

The White Russian leadership at this early stage of the Civil War were all men of great prestige and honour, with substantial military reputations and glittering careers behind them.... they were Russia's best. They were faced with an almost impossible military situation and yet rather than compromise they steadfastly chose to tread the path of Honour. Nowhere could this problem of Honour be perceived more clearly than with regard to Russia's continuing participation in the First World War on the Allied side. A conscious decision by the White leadership was made, that, come what may, they simply must continue to take part in hostilities against the common enemy, Germany, and remain loyal to their British, French, Serbian and Italian allies. This was certainly always the position of the Czar, and also that of the short lived Kerensky government, which even mounted one last, huge attack against the Germans in July 1917 (the "Kerensky Offensive"). Honour however, had no place of course, in the Bankers scheme of things. They and their catspaw, Lenin wanted Russia out of the war as quickly as possible and under any circumstances. How easy it was for him to declare Russia out of the war, at the drop of a hat, or stroke of a pen, how easy for this loathsome, pernicious creature without honour or loyalty to abandon hundreds of thousands of miles of Russian territory and people without one backward glance in order to ensure the survival of the red plague bacillus in Russia. After all Lenin would rather fight Russians opposed to Marxism than Germans opposed to Russia! The signing of the treaty of Brest-Litovsk won for Lenin the undying enmity of all true Russian patriots the world over for all time. To appreciate just how much Russia lost to ensure the survival of the plague contagion known as Bolshevism, is one of history's worst incidents and surely must be remembered as such. It should also be remembered that the Imperial German government greatly facilitated the spread of Bolshevism, by the provision of the infamous "sealed train" which carried the alien plague germs in person through Germany and into Russia, depositing its polluted and poisonous cargo on to the Finland Station in St. Petersburg, from where the disease spread. Russia was attacked by that hideous triad of Germans, Bankers and Bolsheviks. Such an unholy alliance! No less a person than the German Ambassador to Lenin's quasi state in 1918 made the greatly revealing statement as follows;

"...please use larger sums (cash bribes via New York banks) as it is greatly to our interest that the Bolsheviks should survive. As a party the Kadets (Constitutional Democrats) and the Monarchists would work for the revision of the Brest Treaty. We have no interest in supporting the Monarchist ideas which would reunite Russia. On the contrary we must try and prevent Russian consolidation as far as possible, and from this point of view, we must support therefore the parties furthest to the left."

(Count W. Mirbach, German Ambassador, Petrograd, 1918. Reference; A History of Modern Russia by Lionel Kochan.)

This unholy menage a trois deployed against Holy Russia had to be one of the most cynical political alliances of world history. I cannot help but recall the Nazi-Soviet pact of August, 1939, a similar arrangement, ultimately as short lived. Incidentally Mirbach was murdered by a couple of his erstwhile friends, not long afterwards, in July 1918.

As the preparations of the fledgling White Army continued, the murderous campaign of looting, terror, rapine, butchery, genocide and murder inaugurated by the reds in the South Ukraine and the Caucasus continued unabated. This area was dotted with many Cossack Stanitsas which the loathsome reds knew well were loyal to God, the Czar and Russia. Lenin's dictum that one half of humanity (but especially Russians) must perish to ensure the survival of Marxism was here put into effect with deadly force. At the tiny settlement of Ivanovo, 40 women and children were butchered by red guards under the command of one Jacob Heim (a very Russian name!). At Marinskoye, the Church was pillaged and the Priest in charge nailed to the door, his eyes gauged out, and his hands cut off. General Denikin personally speaks of the incident of the priest in his memoirs.... after the reds had murdered the priest they proceeded to bayonet to death two old peasants who had tried to protect their pastor. (Source; Memoirs: General Anton Denikin. 2 Volumes) Near Stavropol in the North Caucasus fifty two officer cadets (aged 13 and 14) who had been taken prisoner were shot to death after first having had their epaulettes (Pognoi) nailed to their shoulders. It is very important to remember at all times that this systematic and organised red terror was going on all over Russia at a frightful rate, especially West of the Ural mountains. The reds were aiming at no less than the total extermination of the entire Russian Orthodox Church, the Monarchy and anyone associated with it, the officer corps, the entire Cossack Brotherhood, the police and members of any party opposed to Bolshevism.... the list is endless, as is the number of victims of Communism. The first book banned by the Bolsheviks in the areas they controlled, was of course, The Protocols.... how very surprising! The red monsters were serving their masters, the Bankers, admirably. The worst of the persecution was directed against the Russian Orthodox Church, The Mother of the Nation.... Monasteries were destroyed, thousands of monks and nuns butchered with frightful cruelty, many Bishops were killed - the lucky few escaping into exile where they continued the fight, with renewed courage and vigour. What follows is taken from a letter written by one of the lucky few to an associate who had escaped abroad and settled in Alaska.

"We have had many new Martyrs among us since the illegal overthrow of our dear Czar.... some Communists tied up Elder Zosima (a 92 year old recluse!) and burned him and his forest cabin together. His burned bones were brought to the Monastery. Our brothers were at that time working on the farm, doing the work themselves. In the Autumn they began to bring to the Monastery whatever had been gathered during the Summer, and some young Communist hoodlums attacked them and beat them up terribly. Those not dead were crippled for life. They did inhuman things to the defenceless monks, tearing out their hair and beards. Many have already departed to another life, and similar frightful things have occurred all over Russia. Holy New Martyrs of Kaluga Pray to God for us!" (Source: "Father Gerasim of New Valaam." Rassphor-Monk Gerasim)

Against this backdrop did the Volunteer Army take the field against the enemies of all civilisation.

The First campaign fought by the newly formed White Volunteer army was the so-called ICE MARCH in Winter 1917/1918 when the little army formed to defend Russia from the red terror was launched into an offensive aimed at clearing the North Caucasus of reds and capturing the strategic centres of Ekaterinador and Novocherkask. Generals Alexeev, Denikin and Kornilov envisaged a Winter campaign for a number of viable reasons. Firstly, the red pressure on Rostov on Don, the White base, was becoming intolerable. Also, to liberate the loyal Cossack settlements would be a good move as it would boost recruitment and demonstrate to the whole world - friend and foe alike - that in Russia there was still an army prepared to defend the right, and Holy Russia. The Generals also hoped to be able to swing to the South West along their line of march from Rostov and take Novocherkask and Ekaterinodar, thus allowing supply lines to be opened to the Allied Forces currently operating in the Black Sea area and Turkey and Mesopotamia. The Volunteer army could expect aid from the British, their allies, whether they were engaging Bolsheviks or Germans.... indeed, there were many instances of co-operation between British and White troops against the Germans,* Turks and reds.

The forces available for this first campaign were very limited even though more men were constantly arriving. They needed training and breaking in - this took a minimum of six weeks; so time was a precious commodity for the Volunteers. Forces available were as follows; less than 6,000 infantry, a few hundred cavalry, around 30 guns and a few carts and civilian traps. There were also several dozen machine guns. Against this the reds had in excess of 50,000 men, hundreds of guns and of course the murderous political police of the Cheka, comprising some 15,000 in the Caucasus area. The Whites did have an advantage. This, was far superior discipline and training, for many of the White troops were ex officers, NCO's and rankers of the old Imperial army. Also, the White forces were concentrated into one, though small, powerful and tightly knit fighting force. The reds were scattered all over Caucasia and a fair proportion were unwilling conscripts, totally uninterested in Marxist verbiage. The rest consisted of positively the worst elements in society - released criminals from the prisons, freed and armed by the Reds, bandits, perverts and degenerates, and of course, the usual crop of rootless international professional revolutionists, with New York accents.

In November of 1917 the White force pulled out of Rostov in a driving snowstorm and marched South into Caucasia - and destiny. They advanced along the railway lines, wiping out several detachments of reds en route. No quarter was given. Communists were - quite rightly - put to the sword. After what Russia had suffered at the hands of these bestial red animals, the young officer cadets of the White Army were in no mood to debate liberal platitudes.

Their country's life was at stake, and many had already lost relatives - usually unarmed and unprotected - to the Cheka gangsters. This was war to the finish.

Most of the cowardly reds, unused to having to fight anything more lethal than eighty year old Priests and their equally aged parishioners, took to their heels and fled when the Whites hove into view. Just occasionally, when the Cheka were about, they made some pretence at fighting. Doubtless the prospect of being shot in the back of the neck by their own side (usually in the form of Jewish Commissars) stiffened their resolve. The White army needed no such inducement to fight for God, Czar and Fatherland. In those few places where the reds were foolish enough to oppose the White advance they were speedily despatched. Only at one point did anything like serious opposition hold-up the column for more than a few minutes. A guard shed situated alongside the railway track was held by several Cheka riflemen with a machine gun. Under cover of a blizzard, General Markov crawled forward and flung a clutch of grenades through the window, wiping out the whole nest of them. One cannot help reflecting on the fact that there is no recorded instance of Lenin/Ulyanoff-Goldman, Trotsky/Bronstein, or any of the trashy Bolshevik band ever leading from the front in such a way. The White Generals did not use false names either. But then, unlike the reds, they were not trying to conceal their true origins from the Russian people. At last, the army reached the important road, railway and communications network centre for the North Caucasus region of Ekaterinador, described by Richard Luckett as a typical Russian colonial town, with roads radiating out from the centre along broad boulevards and colonnades. (Source: The White Generals by Richard Luckett).

The Whites proceeded to invest the town which carried great strategic importance.... defended by over 40,000 reds led by fanatical Commissars, the town's capture would be exceedingly difficult. A besieging force of less than 5,000 infantry outnumbered by more than five to one by those being besieged! What an extraordinary facet of this most extraordinary of conflicts. General Kornilow, in charge of operations, placed his artillery well, and after a preliminary bombardment, ordered an attack. The Officer cadets, shoulder to shoulder, with bayonets fixed and drums beating, at their head the Colour party bearing the Imperial Eagle, Russian tricolour and the flag of St. Andrew, marched to the attack with great discipline and courage. On their right, in support, were some one hundred of their brothers, the Cossacks of the Host of the Don. On their left, the Bashkir Light Horse. Alas, the reds, safely ensconced behind three layers of barbed wire, dug in, and with artillery and machine-guns, succeeded in repulsing the first attack with heavy loss - several dozen cadets being killed and wounded and also many of the Bashkirs. General Kornilov decided upon a fresh attack at dawn the next day and he was himself up and ready at his command post at first light. By a dreadful stroke of bad luck an enemy shell exploded nearby, mortally wounding the General in the head. He died within minutes, with dignity and courage, as he had lived. He quickly, in his final moments appointed Denikin to take over the army, asked the Priest to bless him, and with a quiet "Lord preserve our beloved country" he expired. I shall not dwell on the desecration of the body by the red vermin, but conclude this section of the study with the observation that the unlucky and premature death of General Kornilov caused a temporary withdrawal from Ekaterinador to the North. In subsequent articles we will note how, after this temporary rebuff, the Volunteer Army returned to the attack and cleared the entire Caucasian region of reds.

On a final note, one of the most interesting aspects of this campaign was the way in which the White Army was greeted as a great Liberating force (remind you of anyone? Ed.) in all those areas taken from the reds. The elders of liberated Stanitsas brought bread and salt to our soldiers and almost inevitably took them straight to any Communists still skulking in their rat holes in the area. They were summarily disposed of and the White advance continued. For the people of Caucasia and the Cossack country the Whites were the true representatives of Russia and released them from the entirely alien political domination of the Bolsheviks. No one understood the issues more clearly than they. Issues which are very much alive today.

to be returned largely on the grounds that it was illegal foreign fund raising." So what was the mysterious Huang up to, for whom and why?"

What is at present known is: That he was born in Fugian, China, fled to Taiwan during the civil war then emigrated to the USA, there, married a Chinese-American and became a banker (Our italics. Ed.) Specialising in Asia business.

At a seminar in Little Rock in 1980 he made two significant connections. Simultaneously, he met James Riady of the Chinese/Indonesian Lippo Group (a vast conglomerate) and the then State Governor of Arkansas - Bill Clinton. Five years later, as a Lippo employee he hosted a Clinton-led trade mission to Hong Kong (1985) "introducing Clinton to the territory's influential Chinese". It will now be no surprise to learn that after the Clintons' move to the White House, Huang applied there for a job and was given a mid-ranking post in the Commerce Dept. "Ostensibly giving up his Lippo post with a $700,000 pay-off".

By the end of 1995, Huang had moved - on the President's recommendation - to the DNC's fund-raising team.

On October 3rd. 1996, Huang was dismissed by the DNC - ostensibly because of staff reduction - or was there something rotten about the fish in the China Sea?

"CHINA? There lies a sleeping giant. Let him sleep! For when he wakes, he will move the world."

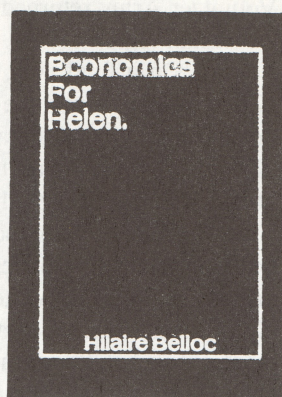

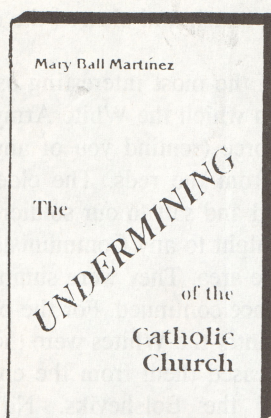

-NAPOLEON

The mission of this generation is the most difficult that has ever faced a Western generation. It must break the terror by which it is held in silence, it must look ahead, it must believe when there is apparently no hope, it must obey even when it means death, it must fight to the end rather than submit.... The men of this generation must fight for the continued existence of the West.

ECONOMICS FOR HELEN

by Hilaire Belloc

NEW! Fresh from the printers we have the new edition of this great, and long neglected, work. (Out of print since the first edition in the 1930's).

".....Hilaire Belloc wrote this book - to puncture definitively the terrible superstition that Economics was a mighty god beyond the comprehension and power of men. And he reveals convincingly that Economics is not only simple to understand in all its essentials, but also that it is wholly under Man's control. All that Man has to do is become aware of the fact, and then do something about it.

.....The 'Helen' in question may have been a niece of Belloc's or simply a literary creation, but one thing is clear: she is only to be regarded as a teenager of reasonable intelligence, for that is all that Belloc believed was necessary to understand both his book and Economics.

.....At the end of the day one thing is certain: Economics for Helen is the best introduction to Economics available to those who know, rationally or instinctively, that 'modern economics' do NOT work, and that a serious alternative must exist. If you've been searching for that alternative, congratulations! You've found it!" (From the introduction).
